

Weber Makes Mark in Jewelry History

Mayor's Jewelers, 3rd & Main – One of Fred Weber's jewelry businesses.

We are Dayton's Pandora Shop-in-Shop which offers a larger and more complete selection of Pandora beads and jewelry.

We are more of a jeweler that creates one-of-a-kind pieces, meeting with customers to develop an heirloom item, Weber said. "Our appeal is being a purveyor of jewels or a custom jeweler. In our studio we make and create pieces in wax and cast them in gold, silver, and platinum." Weber carries the newest styles and trends in bridal fashions and in diamond and gold jewelry. They are always searching for the latest innovations.

A unique quality to the store is that Weber Jewelers has his own watchmaker, Ron Roberts with 44 years experience, on their premises and their own jeweler, Thuan Nguyen, who began learning about the jewelry business when he was 13 years old. Nguyen, from Vietnam, is the third original master jeweler certified by the Jewelers of America. Weber's also has its own manufacturing facility, F&J Manufacturing a 1,500 square foot studio, which is next to their showroom.

Weber Jewelers has a long history of different businesses starting back in the early 1930's which is when the business began as Lawson's Credit Jewelers in Muncie, Ind. The business moved in 1945 and became Mayor's Jewelers at Third and Main Streets in Dayton.

"I came to work for the family in 1955," said Weber. "We expanded into the Salem Mall and Dayton Mall and we were looking to open a fourth store in Springfield at the Upper Valley Mall, when the stores were sold to Oesterman's in 1980." Weber Jewelers had been created in the early 1970's when he opened a store in Hamilton, Ohio that would bear the family name, but then moved the store to Dayton. Weber once occupied a place in the old Maud Mueller candy store, and then moved to the Kettering Tower. He moved into his current building at 3109 Far Hills Avenue in Kettering 15 years ago.

Weber is a well-known man in the jewelry business having owned and operating many stores downtown, including Royston's, Spencer Jewelers and Colonial Jewelers. "I've been going for about 54 years now," Weber said.

Weber has been a figure head in the community serving as a city commissioner and served as a Chamber Board member. He was also the chairman of the Miami Valley Hospital and Premier Health Systems along with helping create City Wide Development Corporation. He is also a director of the Dayton Foundation and has always been involved in jewelry organizations such as the American Gem Society Laboratories, an international diamond grading organization.
